Today in France, female genital mutilation (FGM) such as excision affects both girls and women who are migrants or were born in France to parents from countries where it is practised. For the majority, female genital mutilation is carried out when they return home for the holidays. However, many families go to international vaccination centres before a trip, whether for prevention of health risks, malaria or to update their vaccinations. The aim of this presentation is to provide theoretical knowledge on FGM and also to briefly discuss practical consultation tools.
